Legion: The word derives from the Latin for "levy". Each legion was drawn from Roman citizens, and, for battlefield purposes, was composed of four separate lines, men being assigned to each of the lines according to their class status in Roman society (a distinction that was gradually eroded over the period of the game).