for one charge only. They could, when led and used correctly, be extremely effective (and frightening, so much so that the Romans took to emulating their ‘battle cry’). Far too often they were just an unruly mob that disintegrated when faced with superior organization.