In most of the scenarios, the Roman secondary command hierarchy is represented by Tribunes and Praefects. Each legion had six Tribunes for the infantry, each ala had six (later three) allied Praefects for the infantry, and the cavalry was usually commanded by a Praefectus Equitum. Obviously, this is far too many leaders for the game to work smoothly; so, we have applied Occam's Razor (albeit in a less metaphysical manner).