3. After the Shock Combat is resolved, if the infantry unit did not rout and the Elephant unit has not rampaged (9.14), place the Elephant unit in either one of the defender's unoccupied Rear hexes (Elephant player's choice), maintaining its facing.
4. The defending unit, other than a Skirmisher unit, now undergoes a Pass-Thru TQ Check. Subtract the unit's TQ from the DR, with any excess being the number of Cohesion Hits now applied (DR–TQ=Hits).

DESIGN NOTE: Most infantry were trained to (attempt to) avoid an elephant charge by allowing the elephants to pass through their ranks. The maneuver did neutralize some of the elephant's power, but at some cost in cohesion to the rank-splitting units.

9.12 Elephant Screens: Elephants were quite vulnerable to missile attacks, and, to protect against this, armies surrounded each Elephant with its own light screen of skirmishers, usually archers represented by the small "a" on the counter. The firepower is much less than normal archer units, to account for the size of the screen and its tactical use.

Elephant Screens can Missile Fire with Reaction Fire (8.2) only, using the Elephant Screen row on the MRRC. Elephant Screens have their own missile supply markers. Leader elephants do not have screens (they usually did, but they were too small to be a factor).

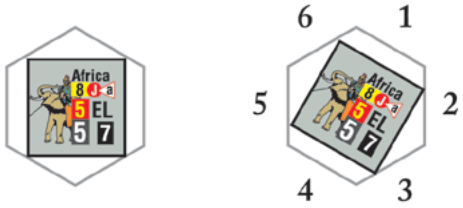

9.13 Tower Riders: The riders atop elephants were armed with javelins and are treated as Mounted Javelinists for Missile Fire purposes. The Elephant unit may use Reaction Fire with both its javelins and its screen, with the player rolling separately for each.

DESIGN NOTE: Several historians portray Hannibal's elephants without "towers." Makes no difference, the rule remains the same.

9.14 Elephant Rampage: When an Elephant unit routs, it Rampages. Leader Elephants also Rampage, but they have less of a chance of doing so. Each time an Elephant unit routs, its player rolls the die and does one of the following, depending on the DR:

Die Roll	Result
0	The Elephant unit heads in the direction of the nearest friendly unit, opposing player's choice if there is more than one nearest unit. A Leader Elephant is eliminated.
1–6	The Elephant unit heads in the direction indicated on the Compass on the map, an example of which is given below. Note that geographical direction is represented at the vertex; the direction in which the Elephant is to Rampage is by hexside.
7–9	On the first Rampage DR, the Elephant heads in the direction directly away from the unit that caused the rampage. A 7-9 on any subsequent die roll means the elephant's mahout has been successful in stopping the rampage by driving a wedge into the beast's brain; the Elephant unit is eliminated. If it is a Leader Elephant, the unit is, instead, immediately rallied with Cohesion Hits equal to its TQ minus 2.

Each Elephant Rampage is always resolved immediately, before any other game mechanic is addressed, except for Orderly Withdrawal in face of the rampaging elephant (6.51).

EXAMPLE: The above diagram shows the elephant unit refaced after a Rampage die roll of 1. This is just an example; use the compass on the map for each battle.

A rampaging Elephant and any stacked leader with it always attempt to move 3 hexes per directional die roll in the indicated direction until it either moves off the map or is otherwise eliminated. If a rampaging Elephant unit would enter a hex occupied by a unit, whether enemy or friendly, the Elephant unit stops in the adjacent hex and the unit incurs 1 Cohesion Hit if the Elephant would have entered through a Front hex or 2 Cohesion Hits if it would have entered through a Flank or Rear hex. A cavalry unit incurs 2 Cohesion Hits regardless of the angle.

If the affected units are a stack, both units receive the Cohesion Hits. If there is a leader in the hex (alone or stacked with a unit), and he cannot withdraw (see 4.72), he is tragically impaled on the elephant's tusks, tossed high in the air, and then crushed to death under its feet. All that without a die roll!

The player now rolls again, as above, repeating the process until:

- The Elephant unit rampages off the map, or
- The Elephant unit is eliminated (7-9 mahout DR), or
- The Elephant unit is at least 8 hexes from the nearest unit, in which case it is eliminated, or
- If none of the above, after the 4th consecutive Rampage DR, the Elephant unit is eliminated.

A leader stacked with a rampaging Elephant goes along with the Elephant on the Rampage. When the Rampage ends, the player rolls for a leader casualty (4.73). If the leader survives, he remains on the map where the Elephant ended the Rampage. If the Elephant Rampages off the map, both the Elephant and leader are eliminated.

Rampaging elephants have no ZOC, do not trigger Reaction Fire of any kind, and they may not be rallied. Each Rampage is
