HISTORICAL NOTE: One of the problems with cavalry throughout military history is that it was often difficult to stop victorious cavalry from pursuing the fleeing enemy troops. (Some historians believe that Hannibal, wily fox that he was, counted on the superior Roman cavalry galloping off at Zama!) The telling factor in getting the runaway horse back into the battle was usually the level of leadership control.